“Migrationology” is a discipline that uses various methods of empirical investigation and critical analysis to develop a body of knowledge about migration, resettlement, identities, multicultural diversity, employment and settlement integration model, immigration panic and health communication, popular misconceptions about immigrants and refugees, intercultural communication, social justice, social outcomes and more. The discipline of “Migrationology” crosses the boundaries of sociology, political science, psychology, communication, intercultural studies and communication, immigration studies, public policy, health and medical communication, economy, education, social capital and many other fields.

“Migrationology” Framework

In Canada, the metaphorical understanding of immigrant settlement and integration is that of a “mosaic”. (Yan & Anucha, 2017, p. 31)

Summary

Canada is a global leader in immigration management and integration. Canada should brand itself in migration research as well. As a researcher, I am exploring and advocating a new discipline concept – “Migrationology” in the context of Canada, in which scholars, practitioners and policy makers could establish a more vibrant intellectual dialogue. “Migrationology” could be a unique discipline approach that exploring immigration trends, policies, theories, models, frameworks and practices in Canada from multi-disciplinary perspectives, supporting the attraction, settlement, resettlement and integration of immigrants and refugees, and making important contributions to the well-being of Canada.
